Economics for Equity and Environment	Economics for Equity and the Environment Network (E3) is a national network of economists developing and applying new economic arguments for environmental protection with a social justice focus. As part of its mission to support better applied economics research and to involve economists more actively in environmental policy, E3 places economics graduate students in internships with environmental organizations during the summer months. The internship program allows graduate students to discover first-hand the real world issues confronting the environmental community and explore avenues for their future research and professional development. NGOs benefit from the expertise of the interns' training in economics and gain greater appreciation for the role economics can play in supporting environmental protection.	8 weeks in Summer	various	maybe	1-Mar-10
The Heartland Institute: Charles G. Koch Summer Fellow Program	Students can look forward to joining a fellowship of 80 motivated peers. Fellows start the program by attending a weeklong, career workshop in the Washington, DC, area, giving them an opportunity to get to know each other and to network. Throughout their internships, they work together on research projects and attend (or view by webcast) weekly lectures. Fellows return to DC at the end of the summer for more training and to present their projects. Eight-week internship at a state or federal policy organization Week-long career and policy seminars, before and after the internship Weekly lectures on popular policy issues	10-week program: June 5 – August 13, 2010	Washington, D.C.	no	31-Jan-10
