On October 26, 2018 the School of Counseling co-hosted a day-long personality assessment workshop with The Gittinger Personality Assessment System Foundation. The interprofessional training included counselors, psychologists, educators, and lay community members interested in developing in-depth skills related to personality assessment.

Presenters included two Central Intelligence Agency operational psychologists and educators from Wright State University and Ohio University: Dr. Roxanne DuVivier, Ms. Kathleen Kutsko, Mr. Earl Rodd, Dr. Peter Shea, Dr. Paul Sletten, and Dr. Elizabeth Wilton.

A packed house of participants at the Chima Family Center learned the Gittinger Personality Assessment System theory, personality profile development, case interpretations, and mental health treatment planning in addition to online resources.

Dr. Robert C. Schwartz, participant and Interim Associate Dean commented “This workshop not only helped develop a broad range of participant knowledge and skills about an intriguing topic held in a state-of-the-art classroom setting, it also highlighted the College of Health Professions’ interprofessional framework while linking the mental health professions with a notable community foundation.”
